Useful Resource

Visit the APHA website for more information about practicing social work in the public health sector:

<https://www.apha.org/apha-communities/member-sections/public-health-social-work>

Individuals trained in both social work and public health are uniquely qualified to address some of our most challenging and complex social health issues. They bring their expertise to issues of health equity, disaster relief, social justice and many others. Whether working in hospitals, non-profit organizations, government agencies, or other settings, social workers in public health settings are designing, implementing and evaluating interventions that promote health at both the individual and population levels.

The MSW/MPH dual degree offered through the Colorado State University (CSU) School of Social Work and the Colorado School of Public Health at CSU gives students the opportunity to complete both degrees in less time, and with fewer credits, than it would take to complete both degrees individually. Students who finish the program leave with an MSW, an MPH in Global Health and Health Disparities, and training in both physical and behavioral health as well as knowledge of the social and ecological determinant of public health. This discipline draws on both social work and public health theories, frameworks, research and practice.
